BOOK REVIEWS

Candidates should have exceptional skills in energy economics and research, teamwork and communication. The EiC has the responsibility for nominating the Editors and the Editorial Board, and for proposing future directions for the content of the Journal. Candidates should have broad experience in peer-review and publication of scientific manuscripts as well as superior leadership and management skills. As a member of the scientific community, the EiC will also have strong interpersonal skills and the ability to bring/build a broad network of contacts, domestically and internationally. The EiC must be free of any political agenda or ideological slant related to energy. This search is effective immediately. The ideal starting date for the successful applicant is January 1, 2024.

Applicants should compile the following as a single pdf document and send by email to Michael.Pollitt@iaee.org

1. Cover letter.
2. CV (including record of peer-reviewed publication, editorial experience, and prior involvement with professional journals).
3. A short statement (max 1 page) about your leadership and management philosophy and experience.
4. A short statement (max 1 page) describing your vision for the future of The Energy Journal and how it should serve its readers.
